

USAID DONATIONS OUTREACH

FACT SHEET 2017-2018

USAID DONATIONS HISTORY

The United States Agency for International Development (USAID) created the Center for International Disaster Information (CIDI) in 1988, one month after Hurricane Gilbert made landfall as a Category 5 storm affecting 10 countries. An outpouring of unsolicited donations to those countries took up space needed to stage and deliver life-saving relief supplies, and USAID and other responders spent valuable time managing unneeded clothing, expired medicine, and other non-critical items. USAID established CIDI to inform the public about the advantages of giving monetary donations to relief organizations and the risks of donating unsolicited material goods. CIDI also provides guidance to volunteers interested in responding to disasters so that they understand the resources, training, cultural sensitivity, and effort required from their end to be a useful and valuable participant in relief efforts.

CIDI's work is focused on donations education and responding to queries from the public, including those directed to the Center by USAID and other U.S. government agencies. In recent years, CIDI has expanded donations outreach to diaspora groups, which are important stakeholders in supporting relief efforts in their home countries.

Unsolicited donations delivered to Samoa after the 2009 earthquake and tsunami took up space needed by relief organizations to sort and deliver life-saving emergency supplies. Financially strapped local governments bear the costs of disposing of spoiled, expired, or inappropriate items.

IMPACT ON DONATIONS AND VOLUNTEERING

CIDI's outreach is amplified during high-profile emergencies when it responds to an increased number of inquiries from the public about donating and volunteering. CIDI works closely with USAID's Office of U.S. Foreign Disaster Assistance (USAID/OFDA) and non-governmental organizations (NGOs) to manage inquiries about unsolicited donations or volunteers.

During major disasters, CIDI responds to referrals from federal agencies, including USAID, the Departments of State and Defense, and the White House. USAID/OFDA also calls on CIDI to serve on its Response Management Teams (RMTs) and directs CIDI to activate a call center and recruit volunteers to answer donations and volunteering inquiries when necessary. CIDI served on RMTs for the 2010 Japan earthquake, 2013's Typhoon Haiyan, the 2014-2015 West African Ebola epidemic, the 2015 Nepal earthquake, and the Hurricane Matthew response in 2016.

USAID CIDI ENGAGEMENT WITH PROSPECTIVE VOLUNTEERS

In addition to informing the public on the risks of donating unsolicited goods, CIDI provides guidance to volunteers interested in participating in disaster response.

DONATIONS CAMPAIGNS

To inform Americans about the effectiveness of monetary donations to relief organizations, CIDI launched or assisted in the creation of several national education campaigns, some in partnership with the Ad Council.

PSAID CONTEST

CIDI's Annual PSAid Competition invites college students to create "Cash is Best" video, print, and infographic public service announcements (PSAs). Winning entries have:

- Attracted more than one billion television and cable audience impressions according to Nielsen data
- Aired in the top 10 U.S. media markets and on shows including NFL Football, Dateline NBC, Jimmy Kimmel Live, Two and a Half Men, The Bachelor, The Grammy Awards, Major League Baseball World Series, and Modern Family
- Been featured in national publications

NEPAL EARTHQUAKE CAMPAIGN

CIDI partnered with the Ad Council to create a PSA to help direct monetary contributions to NGOs involved in international and domestic relief following the devastating earthquake in Nepal. From April to December 2015:

- The PSA was broadcast more than 14,000 times on dozens of TV stations and cable outlets nationwide.
- More than 3.8 million people visited CIDI's Nepal Relief webpage designed to guide public donations to organizations providing disaster relief.
- The campaign was widely displayed online, generating nearly 880 million digital impressions. Advertisements placed in newspapers and magazines had a total circulation of 864,000.

FAMINE, WAR, DROUGHT CAMPAIGN

In July 2011, CIDI was instrumental in facilitating a relationship between USAID and the Ad Council to launch a public awareness campaign about the Horn of Africa drought, which won a national media award in 2013. The campaign's PSAs netted:

- 19,000 broadcasts on network TV, including during the NFL Pro Bowl and AFC Championship Game
- 49 million Facebook mentions
- 68.5 million Twitter mentions
- 656,000 YouTube views

SOCIAL MEDIA OUTREACH

CIDI uses Twitter and Facebook to communicate the benefits of donating responsibly to a variety of individuals and groups outside the humanitarian sphere.

DID YOU KNOW?

CIDI coined the phrase "Cash is Best" in 1988. For approximately 30 years, this tagline has been used by domestic and international relief agencies, U.N. organizations, the White House, and federal agencies to promote effective public support of disaster relief.

CIDI DONATIONS NETWORK & PARTNERSHIPS

CIDI plays a key role in mobilizing national and international organizations to collectively and strategically promote effective donations. CIDI partnered with the Ad Council, InterAction, and National Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster—among other groups—to design and broadcast a national public service announcement campaign in support of Hurricane Sandy relief. The effectiveness of these partnerships demonstrates CIDI's expertise on donations matters and amplifies the message of responsible giving.

DONATIONS POLL

To better understand how and why Americans donate, CIDI initiated a nationwide survey in 2013. Harris Interactive conducted the CIDI donations poll using online interviews with 2,020 adults throughout the United States. Among the findings:

- A majority of those polled (63%) have made donations to relief organizations in the aftermath of a natural disaster in the last five years.
- 41% donated money.
- One-third (33%) who have donated nothing to a relief organization in the past five years indicated they would donate money to a relief organization if a natural disaster occurred somewhere in the world tomorrow.
- 79% of those polled understand that relief organizations prefer monetary donations unless organizations specifically ask otherwise.

The findings indicate that many Americans understand that monetary donations to reputable organizations are the most effective way to help survivors of disaster events. The results of this survey enable CIDI to gauge the effectiveness of donations messaging and adapt the way in which outreach is done. Since the findings were released in December 2013, organizations such as USA Today have used the information to report on donations trends.

MEDIA SNAPSHOT ON DONATIONS

CTV News conducted a live interview with former CIDI Director Juanita Rilling on May 11, 2016, about unsolicited material donations in the wake of Canada's wildfires.

CBS Sunday Morning ran a story on April 24, 2016, that featured Juanita Rilling talking about the "second disaster" of unsolicited material donations that can follow in the wake of a high-profile crisis.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

Scientific American featured a full page CIDI "Cash is Best" Public Service Announcement (PSA) in its February 2014 issue. The PSA showed a donated teddy bear that's "Great for cuddling... Not so great for disaster relief."

The New York Times

The New York Times published an interview with former CIDI Director Juanita Rilling on November 6, 2014 about donations in the wake of the Ebola crisis.

USA Today printed a front page infographic on donations trends in its Christmas 2013 issue from research sponsored by CIDI.

NPR's All Things Considered interviewed CIDI for a January 9, 2013, story on the impacts of inappropriate donations following Hurricane Sandy.

AWARDS

CIDI creative assets have been recognized for substance and artistic quality by TV Access, the Webby Awards and WorldFest Houston.

DIASPORA DONATIONS OUTREACH

OVERVIEW

As disasters unfold, CIDI uses a mix of research and targeted outreach to provide information and guidance to diaspora members, businesses, and diplomatic communities across the United States on donations best practices. CIDI works with thousands of members of diaspora communities in the U.S. to facilitate cash donations – instead of material goods – to countries impacted by disasters.

2016 SNAPSHOT

- Through events and targeted outreach, CIDI engaged with thousands of members of diaspora groups to provide donations guidance in light of concurrent crises in Syria, Iraq, the Lake Chad Basin, the Horn of Africa, and Yemen.
- During the 2016 Hurricane Matthew response, CIDI was at the forefront of U.S. government engagement with the Haitian diaspora. CIDI organized a call with diaspora leaders and the USAID Hurricane Matthew RMT, answering questions and providing guidance on how best to support the humanitarian effort.
- CIDI participated in several events for domestic and international diaspora groups to discuss the problem of unsolicited material donations. Events were hosted at the White House, U.S. State Department, and embassies.

SPOTLIGHT: EBOLA EPIDEMIC

- To support the U.S. Ebola response, CIDI compiled a list of 65 NGOs working on the ground in Ebola-affected countries, as well as a health-sector volunteer database that housed a registry of nearly 6,000 health volunteers.
- CIDI staff also served on the USAID Ebola Response Management Team to educate donors on the impact of unsolicited material donations to West Africa and encourage cash donations.
- At the height of the Ebola crisis, www.cidi.org received more than 22,300 visitors in a single day to learn more about the CIDI's "Cash is Best" messaging.
- CIDI was invited to speak at the National Ebola Summit in Washington, D.C., where staff spoke to 500 West African attendees—including representatives from 55 diaspora NGOs—about how West African diaspora in the U.S. can support international humanitarian organizations working on the ground.

CIDI RESPONSE OPTIONS

Call Center: After major disasters and at the direction of USAID/OFDA, CIDI can activate a hotline service to answer questions from the public and give guidance on how to donate effectively.

Response Management Teams (RMTs): CIDI can serve on USAID RMTs, coordinating donations requests and providing guidance to USAID's humanitarian response team on diaspora outreach.

Diaspora Outreach: Throughout the year, CIDI builds networks and relationships with diaspora communities across the U.S. to help direct their post-disaster donations efforts to ensure they are timely, organized, and effective.

Donations Messaging: For approximately 30 years, CIDI has promoted its "Cash is Best" tagline across the U.S. and around the world to diaspora groups, international conferences, volunteers, and other stakeholders.

Managing Queries: CIDI responds to donations questions from the public, NGOs, and diaspora communities before, during, and after disasters.
